When Doris Sassower and her daughters set out on what would be an incredibly difficult odyssey to extricate their beloved and aged uncle from his virtual prison in a far-distant hospital in San Francisco, They embarked on a voyage marked by love, perseverance and inexplicable hope. With Elena pushing from San Francisco and Doris and her daughters pulling from New York, they accomplish the almost undoable, overcoming an incredible and unfeeling beaurocracy and through sheer force of will finding a new home for their cherished Uncle close to his loving family. They brought him home. In an act of tremendous courage and motivated by what must have been an almost primal need to affect this reunion they moved the un-movable. Their great love triumphed and his death marks not a going away but a coming back, a returning to the heart and soul of the family that loved him and through their love gave the end of his life peace.

Dearest Carey, I hope this captures what I meant to express that night, that none of you can look back in regret for what was not done, none of you can reproach yourselves, you are the innocents in this death but also the heroes. All because you cared.

I love you and I hope that your family will support you in this devastating time and hope you know how much I feel for you and your family and will be sad to miss the funeral and hope that our Shiva call will not seem a pale substitute. I am sorry not to be there holding your hand.

I love you,

M

I am still trying to research Gilbert & Sullivan...
