

THE SECOND CIRCUIT REDBOOK -- REVISED EDITION
MARTIN T. MANTON WILFRED FEINBERG

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON took bribes, initially triggered by his own personal financial losses as a result of the depression.

Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG, has aided and abetted larceny, although not faced with any such financial problems.

Chief Judge MARTIN T. MANTON's bribes were private funds.

The larceny that Chief Judge WILFRED FEINBERG, is engage with are judicial trust assets.

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON's actions were to the disadvantage of those who could afford the financial losses involved.

Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG's action were to the unlawful disadvantage of those who could ill afford such losses.

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON's action were to the disadvantage of persons capable of defending themselves.

Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG's actions were to the disadvantage of a helpless constitutional "person", incapable of defending itself.

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON, did not convict District Attorney, THOMAS E. DEWEY for his exposures.

Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG, did affirm the conviction of the undersigned, without even the benefit of a trial at any level of the judicial hierarchy.

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON, did not, in an attempt to conceal his misconduct, cause the disbarment of THOMAS E. DEWEY.

Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG, did aid and abet the disbarment of the undersigned, by such manifestly unconstitutional conviction.

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON, did not usurp the jurisdictional power of his judicial office.

Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG, knows that since the Act of March 2, 1831, Congress clearly enunciated the fact that neither the Circuit Court nor the District Court has the jurisdictional power to convict, without benefit of a trial, for non-summary criminal contempt.

Chief Judge, MARTIN T. MANTON, did not attempt to corrupt his colleagues on the Circuit Court bench.

The Circuit and District, Courts under Chief Judge, WILFRED FEINBERG, are cesspools of corruption where "fixing" are the "coins of the judicial realm".
