"Thieves for their robbery have authority, when judges steal themselves" (Shakespeare's Measure for Measure, 2:02, 175).

Your Sunday's headline might have shown some justifiable balance by the above addition.

In minutes you can confirm that Chief U.S. District Court Judge Charles L. Brieant of the Southern District of New York is criminally defrauding the federal treasury by being defended in tort litigation without an Attorney General's "scope" certificate, a mandatory requirement for representation, at federal cost and expense (28 U.S.C. 2679[d]), including for members of the judicial branch of government (28 U.S.C. 2671).

Neither the Attorney General nor any U.S. attorney, from New York to California, will sign a 28 U.S.C. 2679 "scope" certificate for Chief Judge Brieant because they are aware that the Chief Judge is engaged in the larceny of judicial trust assets, the diversion of monies payable "to the federal court" to the pockets of his cronies, extortion and other racketeering activities -- activities clearly not "within the scope of his office".

The amount extorted by the Brieant entourage from one individual, in exchange for his not being incarcerated under a criminal conviction, has been confirmed by a responsible media representative as being more than $2,500,000, and recently admitted in court papers to be more than $1,000,000.

Black-robed crime reaches vertiginous heights when Chief Judge Brieant's dragooned federal representatives oppose or do not support the recapture, in favor of the federal government, monies payable "to the federal court" which was diverted to the pockets of his cronies.

A timid media betrays its readers and abdicates its responsibility by exposing one type of crime, while simultaneously concealing its more egregious counterpart.
